CHANUKAH SERVICE

INTRODUCTION

Chanukah and Passover are among the most celebrated holidays in the Jewish world, Passover because of the deep resonance of the emancipation narrative in Judeo-Christian culture, and Chanukah because it is often close to Christmas, and the Jews can then celebrate in parallel with their Christian neighbors. At first glance, Chanukah is a fairly innocuous holiday; with candles, dreidels, the small pitcher of oil, and Judah the Maccabee emancipating the Jews from the Greeks, the songs celebrating freedom, it all seems perfectly tame and above board. But it is not; as in all nationalist narratives, stories of wholesale bloodletting are often swept under the rug. Consider the people Judah was fighting against; it wasn’t only the Greeks, but also other Jews, specifically a type of Jew with whom we’d actually be familiar. That type is the Hellenized Jew, a Jew who had accepted Greek cosmopolitanism and many Greek values, a Jew who in many ways resembles the modern American Jew. Judah the Maccabee espoused a type of zealotry found today only in the most reactionary religious groups, a Judaism from which we distance ourselves.

Another disturbing aspect of the history of Chanukah is the idea of martyrdom for religious causes. Channah and her seven sons all died for refusing to bow to the idol in Hellenic Judea. Let us acknowledge that we would have bowed down to these idols with alacrity had we been put in that situation. In point of fact, we are very likely descended from people who chose to live and compromise instead of die for an abstract concept.
Ayfo Oree (Where Is My Light)

Lyrics by Rabbi Sherwin Wine,
Music by Abe Mandel

Where is my light? My light is in me.
Where is my hope? My hope is in me.
Where is my strength? My strength is in me.
And in you. And in you.

RETELLING SOME OF THE HOLIDAY STORY

Following the fall of Babylon, the Persian empire, initially led by Cyrus, took over. The biblical accounts of the Books of Daniel, Ezra, Nehemiah, and most importantly Esther tell of the Jewish experience in Persia. Though there is a good deal of debate regarding the factual basis of the Book of Esther, it does tell an optimistic tale of Jews surviving and thriving in the vast Persian empire and especially in the capital of Shushan. The situation it describes may very well have a partial basis in fact, considering the parallel stories of Daniel and Ezra, who also found success in the court.

All the acts of his power and might, and the full account of the high honour of Mordecai, to which the king advanced him, are they not written in the annals of the kings of Media and Persia? For Mordecai the Jew was next in rank to King Ahasuerus, and he was powerful among the Jews and popular with his many kindred, for he sought the good of his people and interceded for the welfare of all his descendants.
This hopeful note at the end of Esther marks the end of the biblical story. Following the partial return to Judea under the Persian empire, a period of quiet descended – not upon the Jewish world, but upon our knowledge of the Jewish world. Great and momentous things happened on the world stage, perhaps most importantly that Alexander the Great, who had Aristotle as a tutor, conquered the entire Persian empire and expanded it greatly. This included the tiny province of Judea. But Alexander the Great died young and his generals fought over the empire that he had bequeathed them. The land of Judea changed hands a couple of times. As the age of the Maccabees dawned it was controlled by the Hellenistic kingdom of Syria.

OH CHANUKAH, OH CHANUKAH

Oh Chanukah, Oh Chanukah come light the menorah.
Let's have a party, we'll all dance the hora.
Gather round the table, we'll give you a treat.
Dreidels to play with and latkes to eat.
And while we are playing, the candles are burning low,
One for each night they shed a sweet light
To remind us of days long ago.
One for each night they shed a sweet light
To remind us of days long ago.

Oy, khanike, oy, khanike a yontef a sheyner.
A lustiker, a freylekher, nito nokh a zoyner!
Ale nakht in dreydl spiln mir, frishe heyse latkes esn mir.
Geshvinder, tsindt, kinder, di khanike-lihktelekh on.
Zol yeder bazunder, bazingen dem vunder
Un tantsn freylekh in kon.
Zol yeder bazunder, bazingen dem vunder
Un tantsn freylekh in kon.
THE JEWS AND THE GREEKS

What happened to the Jews during this time period in Judea, or anywhere else for that matter? No one knows much. Following the silence of the late Persian and early Hellinistic periods, all we can actually ascertain is that the Jews changed, though not unrecognizably. Consider the Book of Ben Sira, written in the early second century before the Common Era in Jerusalem. It is closer in spirit and content to the biblical Book of Proverbs than anything else – it still advocates the same prudent and practical advice -- but the Torah and the Prophets have since become holy books. Ben Sira does not speak of or relate to Hellenism explicitly, but does advocate a pious lifestyle, implicitly rejecting outside influences. But Ben Sira’s rejection was not universal. Many Jews desired an accommodation with the Greek culture, for the Greeks had bequeathed the world cosmopolitanism and philosophy, a way of looking at the world which we would recognize. And thus, a civil war broke out in tiny Judea, one which would alter the trajectory of history.

THE GREEKS

The ancient Greeks felt themselves to be outside the divine order, strangers in the world, self-determining. They found themselves among peoples whose behavior they didn’t understand. Despite their oracles, priests, folk wisdom, and Olympian deities, there was no ultimate authority on matters of truth in their culture. The way to understand was to ask questions. The first age in which this rare form of inquiry became common enough to emerge as whole schools of critical inquiry was that of ancient Greece in the 6th century B.C.E.
In his Panegyricus, or book of praise, Isocrates of the sixth century B.C.E., defines the term Hellenes, not as a race, but as all those who share an overall philosophical and aesthetic outlook committed toward self-perfection. Isocrates credits philosophy with being the source of institutions that shaped Athens and, philosophy, in his words, “was given to the world by our city.”

MEE Y’MA-LEL

Who can retell the things that befell us?
Who can count them?
In every age a hero or sage comes to our aid.

Hark! At this time of year in days of yore.
Maccabees the Temple did restore
And today our people, as we dreamed
Survived the tyrant, our nation was redeemed.

Mee y’ma-lel, g’voo-rote yis-ra-el
o-tahn mee yim-ney?
Hen b’chol dor ya-koom ha-gee-bor go-el ha-ahm.

Shma! Ba-ya-meem ha-hem
baz-mahn ha-zeh.
Ma-ka-bee mo-shee-ah oo-fo-dey
Oo-yo-mey-nu kol ahm yis-ra-el Yeet-ah-ched ya-koom v’yee-ga-el.
THE STRUGGLE
Matitiyahu and his sons, led by Judah, were zealous priests living some miles from Jerusalem. They transformed this struggle of ideas between religious exclusivism and cosmopolitanism into a deadly civil war against Hellenes and their accommodators. After a bloody struggle against the Syrian army beginning in the 160’s BCE, they were victorious. The wily politician Jonathan, Judah’s brother, cemented this victory by playing rival Hellenistic kingdoms against each other and thus ushered in the era of the independent Hasmonean commonwealth. The deep irony is that by the second generation these Hasmonean kings who came from pious priestly stock, adopted Greek names, such as Aristobalus or Janai, and made their own accommodation with Greek culture.

TODAY

How, as humanists, are we to relate to this? There is not one right way. There is not one correct answer.

We may admire the struggle of our ancestors for self-determination, but we must mourn the great loss of life.

We respect the Hellenistic Jews who wished to reach accommodation with the dominant culture of their period, for in many ways we are like them. We have learned that it is better to live for a cause than to die for it.

O little lights of mystery
You recall our history
And all that went before
The battles and the bravery
And our release from slavery
Miracles galore.

O little lights of mystery
You retell our history
Your tales are tales of pain.
My heart is filled with fears
My eyes are filled with tears
"What now?" says the haunting refrain.

This is the history that led to our holiday of light, our holiday of rededication. But history was not the only factor that led to a holiday of lights and dreidels, the season determined it as well. Chanukah is celebrated on the 25th of the month of Kislev on the Jewish calendar, which always falls near the time of the winter solstice, just like Christmas, another holiday of lights, which falls on the 25th of December. It is natural that at a time of great darkness, we will celebrate with light, with candles, with fire. And thus, the myth of the lasting light from one small jar of pure olive oil during the Maccabean rededication of the temple, was born.

SVIVON

S’vee-von sov, sov, sov
Cha-nu-kah hoo chag tov
Cha-nu-kah hoo chag tov
S’vee-von sov, sov, sov
Chag seem-cha hoo la-ahm
Nes ga-dol ha-ya shahm
Nes ga-dol ha-ya shahm
Chag seem-cha hoo la-ahm

S’vee-von, turn and turn
While the lovely candles burn.
What a wondrous holiday
Watch us sing and dance and play
Tell the story full of cheer
A great event happened there
It’s a holiday of light
For eight days and eight nights.

LIGHT ONE CANDLE

by Peter Yarrow

Light one candle for the Maccabee children.
Give thanks that their light didn’t die.
Light one candle for the pain they endured,
when their right to exist was denied.

Light one candle for the terrible sacrifice justice and freedom demand.
Light one candle for the wisdom to know when the peacemaker’s time is at hand.

Chorus

Don’t let the light go out
It’s lasted for so many years.
Don’t let the light go out
Let is shine through our love and our tears

Light one candle for the strength that we need to never become our own foe.
Light one candle for those who are suffering the pain we learned so long ago.

Light one candle for all we believe in, let anger not tear us apart.
Light one candle to bind us together with peace as the song in our heart.

Chorus

What is the memory that’s valued so highly that we keep alive in that flame?
What’s the commitment to those who have died when we cry out, “They’ve not died in vain.”

We have come this far always believing that justice will somehow prevail.
This is the burden and this the promise and this is why we will not fail

Chorus

Don’t let the light go out (3x)
Two New Adaptations to the Traditional Melody

Maoz Tsur (Rock of Ages)

JEWISH HEROES, LET OUR SONG 🎵

Jewish heroes, let our song
Praise our saving power
Though amidst the raging foe
We raised our sheltering tower
Furious they assailed us,
But our arms availed us
And our fists broke their swords,
Our own strength prevailed us.
And our fists broke their swords,
Our own strength prevailed us.

Children of the human race
Whether free or fettered,
Wake the echoes of your songs
Where you may be scattered
Yours the message cheering
That the time is nearing
Which will see all people free

Tyrants disappearing.
Which will see all people free
Tyrants disappearing.
MACCABEES OF OLD

Maccabees of old did rise,
To defy the wicked king.
They stood tall and bravely fought
Soon they heard freedom’s ring.
They brought a message cheering,
That the time was nearing,
Which will see, all people free,
Tyrants disappearing.
Which will see, all people free,
Tyrants disappearing.
